

Sujini Ramachandar, PhD, CCC-SLP is an assistant professor at Southern Connecticut State University. Her research focuses on neurological differences associated with stuttering. She has more than 15 years of experience in treatment and assessment of stuttering disorder in both adults and children. She owned and operated an early intervention and preschool itinerant agency in Syracuse NY from 2001-2013. During her time as a partner at the agency, she managed over 25 speech language pathologists, occupational therapists and special education teachers. In addition to teaching and research, she continues to work with children with hearing loss, language and phonological delays, and children who stutter.